A. Campus Accommodation

The College provides residential facilities for postgraduate students. There are separate residences for men and women. Students can also choose to live on their own outside the campus. Students will share rooms, two persons in each room. This arrangement is intended to enable a master's student to interact with another master's student and have sufficient independent time to work on research dissertation and other project assignments. There is no cooking facility in both men's and women's dormitory and all the students are required to take their meals (breakfast, lunch, and dinner) at the common student dining.
